

Russia ready to create world centers to enrich uranium

Great idea ... it's about time that the US suggested sensible solutions.

Russian President Vladimir Putin has said that Russia is prepared to create world uranium enrichment centers whose services would be available to other countries, including Iran.

“We suggest creating a network of centers to enrich uranium and to make access to them equitable for all countries eager to develop the civilian nuclear power industry,” he told a major news conference in the Kremlin.

“Such an invitation was made to Iran a while ago,” Putin said. “In implementing these plans the problem of non-proliferation emerges. It encompasses uranium enrichment and recycling of spent fuel. The task is to find a solution that would allow one and all to have and develop a nuclear power industry and at the same time ensure global security.”
